The Autorité adopts its procedural notice on settlement in order to make it more legible for companies and give them more predictability

The Autorité de la concurrence releases today the finalised text of its procedural notice on the conditions for implementing the settlement procedure. This document, which is based on more than two years of application, is intended to help businesses and their advisers who wish to use this system by presenting the actual settlement procedure process, as well as the way the Autorité envisages it.

The settlement procedure

The settlement procedure, which took effect with Law 2015-990 of 6 August 2015 for Growth, Activity and Equal Economic Opportunities (known as the Macron law), replaced the "no contest of objections" procedure. It allows companies that do not challenge the allegations brought against them to obtain a financial penalty within a range proposed by the General Rapporteur and agreed by the parties.

In-depth discussions with companies and their advisers

The procedural notice is the result of several months of in-depth discussions with all interested stakeholders: companies, lawyers, specialised associations, etc.

A public consultation was held between March and April 2018 on an interim draft text in order to allow all interested parties to submit comments and amend the discussion initiated by the Autorité de la concurrence. The Autorité received very informative written contributions and organised a meeting to exchange with all contributors.

This dialogue was supplemented by an interactive debate held on 2 October during the Autorité's "Rendez-Vous", which provided an opportunity to review the practices adopted by the European Commission and other competition authorities, and the expectations of companies and their advisers. In view of the various contributions, the Autorité has enriched the text and clarified certain points such as:

> - The different factors that might motivate comapnies to use the settlement procedure;
> - The possibility for a company to ask the Autorité about the settlement procedure at any given time of the procedure;
> - The amendment of the mutual information procedure for the companies regarding the implementation of the settlement procedure;
> - The explicit possibility for companies to present short written comments on the determination of the size of the penalty within the range.

A procedure valued by the companies

The settlement procedure has already proven itself to be a tool appreciated by companies: since the entry into force of the new provisions of the Macron Law, 12 decisions have been handed down with a settlement, representing nearly €672.5 million in fines. The settlement decisions concerned a wide range of practices, from abuse of a dominant position to large-scale cartels and gun jumping[1].

In addition, the Autorité has implemented a combination of leniency and settlement procedures[2], which demonstrates the contribution that can be brought by these negotiated procedures in which companies decide to cooperate with the Autorité. The benefits are numerous, such as the possibility for companies that wish to do so to complete a procedure more quickly, to save procedural costs and to obtain a reduction in penalties that can be substantial. For the Autorité, the use of the settlement procedure may make it possible to close certain procedures faster and to free up resources that will enable it to carry out its tasks more effectively.
