In Japan, the best place to buy the iPhone 17 Pro Max is directly from Apple's official website or at Apple retail stores located throughout the country. Apple provides a straightforward online shopping experience with detailed specifications, shipping options, and customization possibilities, such as choosing between different colors and storage capacities.

Aside from the Apple Store, there are also authorized resellers, carrier shops, and electronic retailers like Yodobashi Camera and Bic Camera, where you can find the iPhone 17 Pro Max. However, buying directly from Apple's official site has the advantage of receiving exclusive online offers, warranty services, and the option to choose AppleCare+ for added protection.

Do I Need to Pay Japanese Sales Tax on the iPhone 17 Pro Max?

Yes, the prices listed on Apple Japan's website include Japan's consumption tax (which is currently 10%). This is standard for all consumer purchases within the country. The consumption tax is included in the final price of the iPhone 17 Pro Max, so the price you see on Apple's website is what you will pay at checkout, unless there are additional shipping fees or special promotions involved.

If you're visiting Japan and planning to purchase an iPhone as a tourist, you may be eligible for a tax-free purchase. Japan offers a tax exemption for foreign visitors who spend more than a certain amount at participating stores, so be sure to inquire about the tax-free option when making your purchase at an Apple Store or an authorized retailer.
