When did it launch — and what's the announced starting price?

The new iPhone 17 series was officially unveiled by on September 9, 2025, with sales beginning around September 19.

According to Apple's standard global pricing, the base model of iPhone 17 Pro Max starts at USD 1,199 before regional adjustments.

What that means for Europe — typical Euro prices

Because of VAT and other region-specific costs, iPhone prices in Europe are higher than the U.S. base. A recent detailed European price list shows that for the 256 GB version of iPhone 17 Pro Max the "from" price varies slightly by country.

Here are common price points across several major EU markets for the 256 GB model: Germany and Austria — about €1,449, Spain — ~€1,469, France/Belgium/The Netherlands — ~€1,479, and Italy/Ireland — ~€1,489.

Configuration and storage: what you get for your money

Unlike earlier generations that started at 128 GB, the iPhone 17 lineup — including Pro Max — now begins at **256 GB****.

This means that when you pay ~€1,449–€1,489, you're getting a phone with 256 GB storage, which for many users is plenty for photos, video, apps, and daily use. Higher-storage variants (e.g. 512 GB, maybe 1 TB) will cost more — though exact euro-prices for those configurations tend to be notably higher.

Why the price is higher in Europe than in the U.S.

There are several reasons for the jump from the U.S. base price to European retail: VAT (value-added tax), import costs (logistics, duties), regional pricing policies by Apple, and local market adjustments. These add up — which is why €1,449+ for Pro Max in Europe corresponds to $1,199 in the U.S. before taxes.

Moreover, different European countries may have slightly different final retail prices. Luxembourg often offers the lowest price among EU countries, while markets like Italy and Ireland tend to be among the most expensive.

What buyers in Europe should know before purchase

- If you're shopping in the EU, check the local Apple Store — prices vary by country even within EU due to taxes and local pricing policies.
- Make sure you pick the storage size you need: 256 GB is the baseline, but larger storage upgrades will hike the price significantly.
- Be aware of warranty and delivery terms: sometimes phones bought in another EU country have limitations (especially for shipping or warranty coverage if address country differs).
- If you travel — some users pick up their phones in countries with the lowest price (e.g. Luxembourg) — but logistics, shipping, and compatibility (network bands, warranty) may add complications.

Summary: what to expect if you buy iPhone 17 Pro Max in Europe in late 2025

Expect to pay in the ballpark of **€1,449–€1,489** for a brand new iPhone 17 Pro Max with 256 GB storage in many Western and Central European markets. Larger storage versions will cost more. Compared to the U.S. starting price of $1,199, it's substantially higher, but that's standard for Europe due to taxes and regional pricing policies.

If you value storage space, warranty and official retail purchase, buying from a local Apple Store or authorized retailer is often safer even at a higher price. If you travel and want to try finding a better deal — it may save a little money, but you should weigh convenience, warranty conditions and compatibility.

In short: iPhone 17 Pro Max remains a premium product, and the price in Europe reflects that — but for many buyers it offers the full flagship experience with more storage than ever before.
